Today's Topic: The U.S. pauses F1 Visa Interview Process

Currently U.S embassies are not scheduling interviews for students who want to come to the U.S to study. What's going on here? Let's discuss.

Agenda:

1. Review the video: "Visa delays could leave international students in limbo" and related vocabulary
2. Small group: breakout room discussions
3. Large group: wrap-up

US Secretary of State Marco Rubio has directed American embassies around the world to stop scheduling new interviews for student visa applicants. (File Photo)

Let's Talk: Discussion Questions

1. What do you think are some reasons for this action?
2. How might this decision affect international students planning to study in the U.S.?
3. Will this be an improvement in the process or will it make the U.S less attractive for international students?
4. Is it appropriate and fair to judge a student by their social media content?
5. What message does this send to the international community?
6. What other countries are attractive for international students?
